교과목 개요	NOTE: 1. This course is designed to deepen an understating of international relations (I R) by discussing IR theories. In other words, it is not designed for having a gener al understating. As such, you must either already taken courses, such as Introducti on to IR, or already have basic understandings of key concepts and issues associa ted with international politics. If you do not have such a basic conceptual underst anding or training by the Department of Political Science, then do not take this c ourse. 2. This class will be undertaken mainly by students' oral presentations and discuss ions; as such if you prefer a lecture-based course, do not take this one.
수업목표 및 안내	NOTE: The following syllabus is tentative and thus subject to change. A General description of this Course This course is designed to improve (i.e. broaden and deepen) your understanding s of International Relations (IR) through an intensive and interactive discussion ab out various theories (or theoretical perspectives) used to study world politics and states' foreign policy behavior. The theories to be discussed and debated would include not only mainstream theories, such as realism, liberalism, and constructivism, but also those theoretical perspectives that remain at the margins of the field of IR, such as Foreign Policy Analysis (FPA), critical theory, and feminist perspective.

교과목 주요 주제	The course will draw on both classical and contemporary IR literature on theory in order to understand what the main roles of theory have been in IR, how international politics and foreign policy are studied theoretically, what arguments are made by various IR theories and how different or similar they are, and more importantly how we could improve the existing theories employed by IR scholars. Such a theoretical study of world politics and states' foreign policy behavior will be complemented with discussion of historical and contemporary real-world (i.e. empirical) issues and in-class exercises (i.e. oral presentations and interactive discussions). Here we will place our focus on Asia-Pacific regional security and economic issues in an effort to see how useful IR theory in helping us understand real-world issues.
선수과목안내	Reading List The readings for this course consist of background reading, core reading and supplementary reading all of which are listed below. You do not have to buy all of them because a course book, which is to be made with the core readings listed below, will be available in the first week of this semester.
