1. Course Description

This class will be an introductory course of philosophy in which students will learn the historical roots of Western philosophy. We will begin by considering how philosophical reflection starts in ancient Greece. The development of philosophical thought will be traced first through cosmological inquiries of pre-Socratics and the debate between Socrates and the Sophists. This will also give us a chance to discuss what philosophy itself is. We will then read and discuss selections from Plato and Aristotle, two most important figures in ancient Greek philosophy.

In the middle part of this course, we will briefly examine medieval philosophy, focusing on the argument for the existence of God. The relation between faith and reason will be discussed (via Pascal) alongside this perennial issue.

In the final part of this course we will move on to discuss how modern philosophy develops. We will start with Descartes, focusing on the issue of the Mind-Body problem and then proceed to David Hume, examining his metaphysics/philosophy of science, to be more precise, his views on Induction and Causation. Lastly, we will discuss Immanuel Kant's views on how morality can have a secure footing free from subjectivist and relativist challenges.

Throughout the course we will focus on the various central philosophical themes concerning: nature, causation, law, justice, knowledge, virtue and happiness. We will also examine the issue of what the proper method of philosophical inquiry is.

10. Course Policies

Students are encouraged to use English; but since our priority is philosophy, not English, occasional use of Korean will be allowed. Whenever Korean is used, I will translate the comments or questions to English for Korean-less students. Those who used Korean will also benefit by learning how they could have put their ideas in English.

11. Special Accommodations

* According to the University regulation #57, students with disabilities can request special accommodation related to attendance, lectures, assignments, and/or tests by contacting the course professor at the beginning of semester. Based on the nature of the students' requests, students can receive support for such accommodations from the course professor and/or from the Support Center for Students with Disabilities (SCSD).

* The contents of this syllabus are not final—they may be updated.
